Who should participate?
Health care providers, allied health, social workers, school-based personnel, law enforcement, victim advocates, and others interested in working with survivors of violence are encouraged to attend.

Why we're here?
Domestic violence is a health issue and can harm anyone who suffers. This conference is designed for health professionals who are seeking new strategies to care for battered women and their families.

In your own words, how would you describe the Idaho Summit on Domestic Violence and Health: Making the Connection?

An Introduction to the Idaho Risk Assessment of Dangerousness in Domestic Violence: Expanding Beyond the Traditional CAOM Model

Critical Importance and Strategies for Action

Cohen helped to define violence as a preventable public health concern, and has been involved in the development of violence prevention programs and initiatives. Dr. Cohen is also actively involved in research efforts to promote and sustain changes in cultural norms that contribute to violence against women. He has received funding continuously as a primary investigator since 1984 on National Institutes of Health (NIH) or other governmental research awards, including NIH, National Institute of Justice, National Institute of Nursing Research, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and the Office of Violence Prevention.
